

Working With Source Material

Forwarding

I	Illustrating - You use the quoted source material or evidence to illustrate a point you are trying to make.
A	Authorizing - You use the source material to add credibility to what you are trying to say. Usually, this includes naming a credible source to illustrate your points or the points of another perspective.
E	Extending - You use the source material in order to extend your ideas beyond it. The source material is a launchpad to where you want to end up with what you're saying.

Countering

AOS	Arguing the Other Side - You use the source material to argue the opposite side of what it is saying.
D	Dissenting - You use the source material to point out how it might be true some of the time, but it's not true all of the time. You will point out where the limitation exists in their point or evidence.
UV	Uncovering Values - You use the source material to dig deeper into something that was said. Maybe the writer makes a reference that needs to be further unpacked or defined, questioned or examined.

From:

Harris, Joseph. Rewriting: How to Do Things with Texts. Logan, UT: Utah State UP, 2006. Print.